Eligibility for the Bharat Ratna Award:

The selection criteria for the Bharat Ratna have evolved to encompass a wide range of fields. Initially confined to literature, arts, science, and public services, it was expanded in December 2011 to include "any field of human endeavor." The Prime Minister recommends the recipients to the President, with a maximum of three awardees per year. Notably, the award can be conferred posthumously, ensuring that the contributions of individuals are honored beyond their lifetime.

The Authority Behind the Bharat Ratna Award

The President of India is the final authority in awarding the Bharat Ratna, based on recommendations made by the Prime Minister. This process underscores the award's prestige, being directly associated with the nation's highest offices, and reflects the bipartisan recognition of India's most distinguished citizens.
